These three essays, each set in Saudi Arabia, were written by Dale Walker in the 1970s and early 1980s. Although only one was accepted for commercial publication at the time, they all served a certain function, allowing Dale to establish the voice that he would later use to great effect. Just as an artist might sketch several drafts in charcoal before ever dabbing paint to canvas, with these essays, Dale laid the groundwork for his spectacular book, "Fool'sParadise", which was short-listed for the Pulitzer Prize in 1988. And just as a museum might display an artist's sketch next to the final masterpiece, these essays, too, deserve to see the light of day.
