MAGIC. MOONSHINE. MYSTERY.

It's 1932 in the Arkansas Ozarks, and Prohibition is in full swing. Finn O'Brien, grieving the mysterious death of his father—and the loss of his Celtic faith—finds himself on the run from a ruthless moonshiner with magical powers.

Even though twelve-year-old Finn was born in the middle of the Bible belt, he grew up believing in the gods and traditions of the ancient Celts. But that was before his long, painful illness. And before his father's untimely death.

While trying to keep bootleggers off his family land, Finn meets three strangers. They claim to be modern versions of local Celtic deities—small gods. Soon, they run afoul of Arvin Shimmerman, a moonshiner and rogue druid who harbors a personal hatred for these so-called gods. To survive, Finn will have to decide exactly what he believes in—and with his new companions’ help—defeat Shimmerman and save his home.

This debut middle-grade fantasy adventure combines magic and mystery with a young boy’s coming-of-age story. It will appeal to fans of Odd and the Frost Giants and Percy Jackson and the Olympians.
