This is my life journey, from my family roots in Jalisco, Mexico, to my childhood in Tijuana, to my adolescence in the San Fernando Valley of California, and ultimately to my journey into my vocation for social and educational equity. I was a part of the social movement that challenged Stanford University to open up and admit the first significant class of Chicano students and other students of color to the University in fall of 1970. I have had wonderful teachers over my lifetime, some of them in classrooms, who have supported me and prepared me to take advantage of opportunities. I have also been in challenging situations in life that have taught me about myself, forced me to face my weaknesses, and helped me identify my strengths. I give thanks to all of my teachers in every form that they took.
