It was during his time there that a sports writer, referring to Mantle's incredible speed, dubbed him "The Commerce Comet" after his hometown of Commerce, Oklahoma.

Accompanied by his exceptional talent and immense popularity, Mantle's personal life had its share of ups and downs. Despite his struggles with alcoholism, he remained a beloved figure in the hearts of many. Mantle's impact extended far beyond the baseball diamond, inspiring generations of players and fans alike.

Even after his retirement in 1968, Mantle continued to be involved in the game he loved. He appeared at numerous sports events and became a spokesperson for several companies. Mantle's reputation as a charismatic and approachable figure made him a sought-after guest on various television programs.

Tragically, Mantle's life was cut short when he passed away on August 13, 1995, at the age of 63 due to liver cancer. However, his legacy remains everlasting.
