Becoming a Trailblazer

Misty Copeland, born on September 10, 1982, in Kansas City, Missouri, encountered ballet at the age of 13. Her late start in this highly competitive world did little to deter her determination and passion for the art form. Copeland's talent quickly caught the attention of renowned ballet companies, and she joined the American Ballet Theatre (ABT) as an apprentice in 2000.

Over the years, Copeland's rise within the world of ballet has been nothing short of extraordinary. She was promoted to the position of soloist in 2007 and made further strides when she became the first African American woman to be appointed as a principal dancer at ABT in 2015. This groundbreaking achievement shattered the racial barriers that had long persisted within the ballet industry.
