Born in Sheffield, Yorkshire, to a family of steel merchants, Robert Marple was a graduate of Oxford, Cambridge and served in the Royal Navy. An unexpected twist of circumstance brought Robert Marple to Rhodesia in the early 1960's – initially for a few months – as a private tutor; this proved the starting point of his career as an educationist. This book documents Robert Marple's role in promoting African education at a time when few people – let alone individuals with degrees from the top British Universities of Oxford or Cambridge - dedicated themselves as he did to the uplifting of African youth. African education at the time was mostly left to missionaries to fill in the gap left by inadequate provision particularly in secondary education, by the government of the day. Robert Marple played an important role as an educationist and administrator in this respect which makes fascinating reading for those who have an interest in the history of education in Rhodesia and later in Zimbabwe.
