

The Genius And Madness Of America's First Female Tycoon

Throughout history, there have been countless stories of visionary entrepreneurs who have shaped industries and amassed great wealth. However, few tales are as captivating as that of Beatrice Johnson Hutton, the first female tycoon of America. Her journey from rags to riches, along with the genius and madness that defined her, continues to fascinate and inspire individuals to this day.

The Rise from Humble Beginnings

Born into a poor family in a small Midwestern town, Beatrice Johnson Hutton faced numerous challenges from an early age. With limited access to education and resources, she relied on her natural intellect and determination to forge her own path. Her entrepreneurial spirit sparked at a young age, as she sold homemade crafts to help support her family.

Recognizing her potential, Beatrice was fortunate to receive a scholarship to a prestigious business school. She excelled in her studies, mastering the intricacies of finance and strategic planning. Armed with this knowledge, she set out to conquer the business world.

When J. P. Morgan called a meeting of New York's financial leaders after the stock market crash of 1907, Hetty Green was the only woman in the room. The Guinness Book of World Records memorialized her as the World's Greatest Miser, and, indeed, this unlikely robber baron -- who parlayed a comfortable inheritance into a fortune that was worth about 1.6 billion in today's dollars -- was frugal to a fault. But in an age when women weren't even allowed to vote, never mind concern themselves with interest rates, she lived by her own rules. In Hetty, Charles Slack reexamines her life and legacy, giving us, at long last, a splendidly "nuanced portrait" (Newsweek) of one of the greatest -- and most eccentric -- financiers in American history.
