The story of The Vow begins with the tyranny of the Umayyad caliphate, led by Yazid, who sought to usurp the caliphate and distort the teachings of Islam. Imam Hussein, refusing to pledge allegiance to Yazid, chose instead to take a stand for justice and freedom. With a small group of loyal followers, including his family members and close companions, Imam Hussein embarked on a spiritual and moral journey that would forever resonate in the hearts of Muslims worldwide.

The battle that unfolded in the scorching desert of Karbala was incredibly unequal. On one side stood the forces of Yazid, his vast army armed with weapons and power. On the other side were Imam Hussein and his followers, armed only with their unyielding faith and love for Allah. The Ahlulbayt fought valiantly, knowing that victory on the battlefield was not their ultimate goal. They fought to safeguard the values and principles of Islam and to awaken the conscience of humanity.

Despite being severely outnumbered and facing insurmountable odds, the Ahlulbayt remained steadfast in their resolve. They refused to compromise their principles or deviate from the path set by the Prophet Muhammad. The sacrifices made on that fateful day went beyond mere physical pain and suffering. The women of the Ahlulbayt, including Imam Hussein's sister, Zainab, and his wife, Rubab, bore witness to unimaginable hardship.
