

Trayvon Martin Ten Years Later: Sybrina Fulton's Inspiring Journey

It has been a decade since Trayvon Martin's tragic death, a moment that shook the nation and ignited a movement. At the heart of this sorrowful event was Sybrina Fulton, Trayvon's mother, who has not only endured the pain of losing her son but has also become an influential advocate fighting for justice and inspiring change.

Sybrina Fulton's journey began on February 26, 2012, when Trayvon, an unarmed 17-year-old, was fatally shot by George Zimmerman, a neighborhood watch volunteer, in Sanford, Florida. This incident sparked nationwide outrage and drew attention to the deep racial biases and inequalities that persist in our society.

In this powerful essay, the mother of Trayvon Martin shares her grief, reflections, anger, and hope in the wake of a single unforgivable moment that catalyzed the Black Lives Matter movement.

Ten years after the tragic killing of her seventeen-year-old son, Trayvon Martin, Sybrina Fulton has become both the unyielding matriarch of a national conversation and one of the most incredible activators of change in our time. While grappling with the ongoing process of making sense of her grief, anger, and cherished memories, she fights every day for justice.

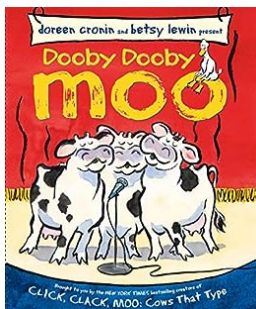

In this moving essay, Sybrina imparts to this generation and the next the lessons and wisdom she's gained in the past ten years—about life, love, and loss; about bad faith; about what changes have and have not occurred; and about the power of her own voice in the gathering storm of a profoundly divided country. Above all, Sybrina knows what it takes to keep moving forward.
